ATTEMPT MADE TO ROB A SAFE IN A SALOON

Someone wanted the savings of Bob Randall at the Sacramento saloon night before last and intended to get into the safe for the stuff, but got frightened off before the game was over. Officer Dodson in his rounds found that the electric light which is always kept lit in the saloon was out and went to investigate. He found the rear door of the saloon open but failed to find anybody inside, as they had probably been warned of his approach and made their escape. He found several drills in front of the safe and it looked as if the work had just commenced when the officer arrived.

Someone must have an idea that Bob keeps his millions in the saloon, as an attempt is made to rob the place every little while.

RUSSIA HAS STUDENT AT UNIVERSITY OF NEVADA

Eugene E. Skorniakoff, representative of the department of agriculture of the Russian government, arrived in Reno this morning with a letter of introduction to Professor Gordon H. True. He called on President Stubbs of the University of Nevada and expressed regret of Prof. True's absence.

The visitor was introduced to Prof. Knight, assistant professor of agriculture and animal industry. They spent the greater portion of the day at the experimental station.

Tomorrow the visitor will go to and view the irrigation project. He is visiting all portions of the United States and will make a report to the department of agriculture of Russia upon his return to that country. He is to pay particular attention to the study of irrigation and the cotton industry.

A representative of the German government is expected here in a few days for the purpose of studying the government irrigation and reclamation project on the Truckee and Carson rivers.

$45,000 WORTH OF TAILINGS FROM NATIONAL LEASE

This morning Frank Frey's two big teams arrived from National with about fifteen tons of rich tailings for shipment to the smelter. These tailings are from the high-grade mill of the Stall lease on the National Mining Company of Nevada's ground.

In most camps this shipment would be considered very rich ore, but at National it is different, for National has the richest gold ore in quantity yet found in the state. While this shipment was only tailings, nevertheless it is rich and is valued at $3,000 to the ton.

The ore extracted from the Stall lease, which was recently purchased by the parent company, was so fabulously rich in the yellow metal that it was impossible to save the full contents of the ore in the pan-arastra mill that reduced the high-grade stuff and consequently a large percentage of gold went into the tailings. However, the rich product was not lost, but on the contrary, as soon as it became dry it was placed in sacks and it is now being sent to the smelter to be reduced into bullion.

The wonderful richness of the ore extracted from the Stall lease can be appreciated when it is taken into consideration that only the ore worth from $20 to $100 a pound was run through the pan-arastra mill that was built especially to handle this rich ore.—Winemucca Star.

TWO YOUNG WOMEN FOUGHT FOREST FIRES

The recent forest fires of Washington, Idaho and Oregon have brought interesting tales of heroic endeavor to save the valuable land that was going to waste, and among these is the story told of Alice Brown and Clara Newmeyer, two pretty young women of Washington who assisted their relatives to ward off the flames that were destroying the rich pines—a fortune to the owners.

A wet gunnysack to prevent suffocation and an axe, a mattock, a pick and shovel and water when obtainable are the fighting apparatus of the fire fighters. With these tools the nerry rangers fight to save the forests from devastation, and foremost among the fighters are those two young Washington women.

It is only in the more accessible regions that water is obtainable. In those sections wagons, equipped with hose, are used. But back in the mountains this method of fighting the flames is not possible, so these two young women joined the party of male relatives and used their muscles with desperation.

It is not always easy, fire-fighting, and sometimes a few minutes of rest from the heat and sun's hot rays is like a god-send. Back in the mountains where the two young Washington women donned male attire as a last resort to save the valuable timber, the most sure-footed horses find progress difficult. The work of holding back the flames is done by cool, nerry rangers, assisted by the young women.

DOG FOLLOWS MASTER ON THE NEXT TRAIN

There is a little black Cocker Spaniel in this city belonging to Chief of Police Burke that can tell counterfeit money from real coin, but Charles Watson, Republican candidate for mining inspector, has a dog that is even more brilliant than the Cocker Spaniel.

This dog is Black Spanish Pointer and he is an extensive traveler. His home is in Carson City, but whenever Mr. Watson takes a trip this dog also travels. Of late whenever Mr. Watson has left Carson for a trip through the state he has left his dog at home, but the black pointer would catch the next train, and no matter where his master might go he would seek him out, sometimes traveling long distances on foot, by train and in stage coaches before locating him.

Yesterday Mr. Watson came to Reno and left the dog at home. The dog hopped onto a train and came to this city and last evening was at the Riverside in time to beg for his dinner from his master.
